

southern Australia. It is formed when charged particles from the sun hit the top layer of the Earth's atmosphere. These particles move towards the poles because they are attracted there by the Earth's magnetic field.

